"The girls are my favorite." – Gov. England encourages formation of women's caucus

Surprisingly, the Assembly has yet to form any caucuses except for those belonging to the two parties, of course. We at the Buzz would be delighted to see formed a Legislative Women's Caucus comprised of Assemblywomen to celebrate and discuss issues relative to the superior sex, such as the current legislation in the Assembly to provide women with complete information about alternative options to abortion, make disposable diapers tax-free, and work to stop violence against women. Women already hold several prominent positions in the Assembly. Highest ranking is Assembly Member Veronica Petrikas, who serves as

Cooper fights for the right to party

Assembly Member Cooper, currently a member of the majority Patriot party, continues to be vocal in his desire to change his party affiliation.

Why is he abandoning his colleagues? Apparently not because of ideological differences or issues with party leadership.

Instead, Cooper was overheard stating, "I'm just trying to maximize personal profit." He clarified that Minority Leader F. Rutledge had promised him two parties (presumably meaning receptions) if he joined the Constitutionals.

Meanwhile, leaders Petrikas and Rutledge have been seen engaged in multiple conversations.

Bipartisan talent

For many, last night's talent show was the highlight of the week.

Assemblyman Thomas managed to upstage his performance from last year with a duet...with himself.

Another popular act was the musical quartet who called themselves The Boarders. Their name presumably comes from the fact that they receive regular meals when staying at COTH...or perhaps they meant Borders?

Should any of the Assemblymen protest the Buzz's declaration of the superiority of women, the editor would like to note two things.

First, immediately prior to the reconvening of session the Governor herself announced that next to members of her own party, the girls are her favorite legislators.

The Governor has yet to make an error in all her years as leader of COTH.

Second, below is the best picture the photographer was able to capture of a group of guys, who were less than cooperative ...We report, you decide.

On the record

Anonymous Executive staffer: "I look like a kindergartener – I got food all over my shirt."

Overheard over breakfast: "Is that a donut?" "Yeah." "Wow, I could never do that in the morning."
